Orient Capital launches integrated Stronger Super APRA Reporting Service

Orient Capital today announced the launch of its new end to end APRA reporting service, integrating data (in different formats) from multiple custody providers, accounting systems and underlying superannuation administration systems to support over 60 funds. The service is being launched to coincide with the new APRA reporting regulations that commenced on the 1st of July and will be available to meet the first quarters reporting mandates due in October.

The new service consists of a highly flexible platform built around Orient Capital's depth of experience interfacing to investment and registry level data and combining different data capture capabilities. Integrated workflow is provided through Orient Capital's existing miracle platform which is configured to provide secure sign-on for existing clients as well as reducing the administration of having to manage multiple systems and data sources.

Orient Capital was a full participant in the recent APRA pilot testing, providing feedback on the new regulatory reporting services, as well as conducting detailed testing and verification.

Commenting on the launch, Orient Capital's COO, Paul Gardiner, said "Increased regulatory supervision and disclosure has necessitated us building a highly responsive solution which brings together data from multiple sources with integrated workflow that automatically applies APRA's verification rules, to provide Funds with timely and accurate reporting. Working closely with parties across the industry, Orient Capital has delivered a reporting platform that meets APRA's reporting standards and also has the flexibility to change and adapt to any future requirements. Orient Capital, through its relationship with Australian Administration Services and Link Super is committed to remaining at the forefront of regulatory reporting services and any future changes imposed by the regulator."
